- 5. Secret recruitment into the Party is relatively common. Most common reason for secret membership is strong purental opposition. Occasionally secret membership is suggested by the Party to recruits who might be used to penstrate the Austrian Socialist Party (200) or take active part in Communist front organizations. Then the chance to recruit a member of the 200 arises, however, the Party usually considers that the propaganda advantage of the 200 recruitment outweighs the advantages to be gained through penetration of the 500e.
- In some cases, membership is kept secret only at one's residence and, in such instances, Party publications and correspondence are delivered to the instances, Party publications and correspondence are delivered to the instances, It is also possible to keep Kroe membership secret in the factory, in which case it is known only to the factory leadership (betriebsleitung) and the Kroe neighborhood leadership (cohnsektionleitung). In the latter case, the secret membership would probably be established to permit fromtorganization work or panetration of the Sroe; secret membership at one's residence is most frequently used in cases of parental opposition.
